

It is critical that net neutrality be maintained. There has been too much consolidation of ISP and allowing them to strangle access unless you pay more will limit the free flow of information and prevent small companies from getting an equitable access to a valuable telecommunication service. Allowing charges for higher speed access will strangle innovation. The ISP should be addressing the needs of this country by improving network capability and keeping it affordable for all. The Internet has become a valuable public utility that must not be hampered by artificial restrictions on speed just to enrich a few corporations.
